Trial by Fire (A Miranda and Parker Mystery) #6 Miranda Steele has a reputation for being tough. But that won't keep her daughter from searching for her real father. If Mackenzie found the man who raped Miranda fifteen years ago? The fallout would be...well, traumatic would be an understatement. Meanwhile her sexy investigator husband wants to take on a cold case back in Chicago. A house fire that might have been arson. Miranda is less than thrilled, but Parker won't take no for an answer. When Miranda learns years ago a young female art student was burnt to a crisp in her own bed, the case sparks a desire to find who did it and bring him to justice. But suddenly Parker becomes aloof. He's up to something, Miranda knows. She just can't figure out what. And now she's beginning to sense the presence of something very, very evil. When the case starts to dig up painful memories, Miranda sees Parker's secrets could ignite her past into an inferno that might destroy them. Can she make Parker tell her the truth before it's too late? Or will they both go up in flames?
