Less Active Mormons: A Collection of Personal Interviews Tom Stogdill

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was established on 6 April 1830 as a tiny American church with just six members. Today this dynamic international Church has grown to nearly 14 million members. But sometimes those who join the Church do not remain active. What reasons do these members give for their inactivity? Most of the author's preconceived ideas regarding these reasons have proven wrong. Read these interviews to find what these formerly active Mormons really say about their reasons for leaving the Church - at least for a season. And enjoy the stories of some who have found their way back.
