Daniel O'Brien and his personality-forward co-captain, Lucy Amudsen, undertake a harrowing flight as they pilot an aging jetliner from Fortaleza, Brazil, to the African Continent. The flight is all about airlifting critical medical supplies and physicians to Liberia. Or is it? After a perilous ocean crossing, they land their broken airplane in a war-torn country seething with violent rebel factions and fatal viruses--and that's the good news. The familiar face of a doctor beckons a day later from the shadows, but though Lucy is smitten by the strange individual, O'Brien begins to suspect the doc may be playing his own deadly game. Soon they discover a secret cartel of smuggling and death surrounding them, but can they escape on their damaged airplane to England? A mysterious figure seems to know their every move, and a pack of murderous hirelings track them at every turn. Who are these people, and what do they want? Aided by a lovely physician, Gina Andreotti, Daniel and Lucy uncover the answer at the same moment they realize that someone far away has no intention of allowing them to stay alive.
