What the critics are saying:

"Disturbing. Nightmarish. Terrifying. And above all original. Ralph Robert Moore's new collection is unlike anything else I've read all year. All decade." AJ Kirby

"...one of the best collections I've read this year, delivering exactly the kind of uncompromising thrills and spills I've come to expect from this writer." Peter Tennant

"A highly recommended book." Mario Guslandi

"...these stories are far from predictable...Moore's work is consistently fascinating, original and devastating. His characters speak to you from whatever hell they inhabit, with clear, unambiguous voices." Trevor Denyer

I Smell Blood features 8 stories and a 45,000 word novel.

Cory ventures into the forest behind his cul-de-sac to search for a little girl who wanders through the woods holding a white stone she thinks is her doll's head.

Jake spends the night camping out in the mountains of Montana. When he returns home the next day, he's brought something cold and evil back from the mountains with him.

Two men go on a night dive off the California coast. Half a mile out, they discover a naked blonde-haired girl underwater, wrapped within the tall, swaying tendrils of green kelp.

Philip and Jill move back to Maine, to an apartment overlooking a frozen pond, where talk has it a giant frog lives. Each night they hear louder and louder sounds coming from that thawing pond.

All Mason wants to do is pick up his tuxedo from the dry cleaner's, but the visit leads to a battle of the wits with the young female cashier that becomes more and more dangerous.

Charley is woken up in the middle of the night by his son Johnny, who owes the sinister Mr. Miller, who "doesn't take no for an answer," thousands of dollars.

In the new world created after the zombie uprising, Nate makes a journey from his family's boarded-up home to the municipal water works where his father's employed, to make sure, for the sake of his kid sister Tess, their father is safe.

You're seventeen, trying to break into the dominant crime mob in northern Texas, run by Knuggles, a police captain who wears a red plastic mask twenty-four hours a day. Your one advantage in life is you're a head-
