Worlds Apart: How Virtually Everyone Has Almost Everything Wrong Mr. Allen J. Earlstone

We have been enacted laws and establishing rules since we first gathered into communities, millennia ago. In endeavoring to enforce these, we have used torture, imprisonment even capital punishment to no avail. Virtually everything we have tried has failed. Why is this so? The answer lies in our faulty thinking. Like everything else, our thinking evolved from our initial primitive beliefs drawn from our early sages. They provided a platform for our civilization as it is today. But just how civilized are we? The slaughter of our fellow humans goes on unabated. Children are dying of starvation all around the world. The gap between the rich and the poor grows ever wider. The United States has more people in prison than ever before. Hatred between people of different race, religion or creed continues. The petty thieves have grown to include international espionage among governments. While technology has developed at a staggering pace, there has been little improvement in the quality of our ethics. Still, there is a reason for this. We perceive the world through astigmatic eyes. Consequently, our reality is distorted. Things are not quite as they appear. Worlds Apart will open your eyes and provide a sharper view of reality, a view that could change your life and pave the way to changing the world
